

Doctor Paul SEABRIGHT
Chaire Walter Jean GANSHOF van der MEERSCH - mars 1998

Actually he is Assistant Director of Research, Faculty of Economics and Politics, at the University of Cambridge. He spent the academic years 1984-5 as a visitor at the Madras Institute of Development Studies, India, and 1992-3 as a visitor at Institut d'Economie Industrielle, University of Toulouse, France.

Teaching: At the University of Cambridge, I teach an undergraduate course in applied microeconomics and postgraduate courses in microeconomic theory, the economics of the environment, development economics and topics in doctoral research. I also teach a course in microeconomics and industrial organization at the College of Europe in Bruges; a course in the microeconomics of common property resources at the University of Toulouse; part of a course on competition policy for transition economies organized for the European Commission at Trinity College, Dublin; and a course on development economics at the Ecole Polytechnique in Paris.

Current research activities: Microeconomic theory; development economics: the economics of the air transport industry; competition policy and industrial policy in Central and Eastern Europe; vertical restraints and European Union competition policy, state aids to industry.

Publications:

Merger in Daylight: the economics and politics of European merger control (with Damien Neven and Robin Nuttall), London, Centre for Economic Policy Research, 1993.

Competition Policy and the Transformation of Central Europe (with John Fingleton, Eleanor Fox and Damien Neven), London, Centre for Economic Policy Research, August 1996.